SCHOLARSHIP

My scholarship bridges fields of design, anthropology, and fashion studies to explore the ways people use dress, fashion, fiber, and textiles to create meaning and community on micro (individual) and macro (cultural) scales. As a designer and fashion anthropologist, I use both creative and qualitative research methods to study social, cultural, historical, and aesthetic aspects of fashion. I convey my research findings multi-modally, including publications, films, textile and garment designs, conference presentations, and curated exhibitions. My work has been recognized through awards, grants, and media attention in major media outlets.

TEACHING

I teach students to use a variety of disciplinary perspectives to think critically about the fashioned body. I teach from a critical anthropological perspective that brings the study of human behavior and culture into conversation with design, aesthetics, materials, fiber science, economics, emerging technologies, fit, and technical design.
